Reading

Read the following passage and answer the questions below:

King Abdulaziz University is one of the most distinguished higher education institutions in the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia. King Faisal was the head of the committee that established this university in Jeddah, in 1967. At first, it was a private university, but in 1971 it became a state university. During the first year the university started its educational programmes with 68 male and 30 female students, but the government's support soon turned KAU into a modern institution. Now the staff consists of more than 2000 people and the male and female students who currently attend amount to about 180,000. Since both male and female students study at KAU, there are two separate campuses, according to Islamic Law.

The aim of the institution is to offer higher education to all students in western Saudi Arabia. This is why, apart from the regular students' programme, KAU has an external programme. It also established the Deanship of Distant Teaching to keep up with the continuous development in learning and teaching technology.
